Tutorial: Chinese Musical Notation Editor

Here, a tutorial for the Suzipu Notation Editor is given. To get familiar with its features, the piece Geximeiling is opened.

Opening the File

Using the button Open File,...

...click on the file 01_geximeiling.png inside the suzipu tutorial folder `./gui-tools/tutorial/suzipu`.

Basic Features

Now, the contents of the file are visible in the Notation Window, by default using the piece's original notation, but in modern reading order.

We can also change the display to traditional reading order using the checkbox Trad. Reading Order,...

...which accordingly changes the rendered image to feature the traditional reading order.

The notation tool also features modern musical notations such as Chinese number notation (jianpu) or staff notation. By changing the notation type by clicking on the jianpu button, ...

...and again, the rendered image inside the Notation Window adapts accordingly. For this tutorial, we will keep the staff notation display.

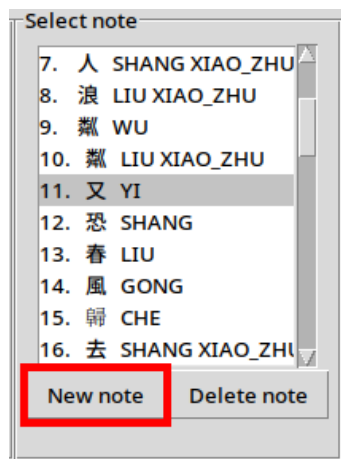

In the Notation Window, when executing right click on a note box, the box is selected and marked red.

At the same time, the note also is marked in the Select note group. Using left click, other entries in this listbox can be selected.

...empty boxes are created after the originally selected one, and the new note box is automatically selected.

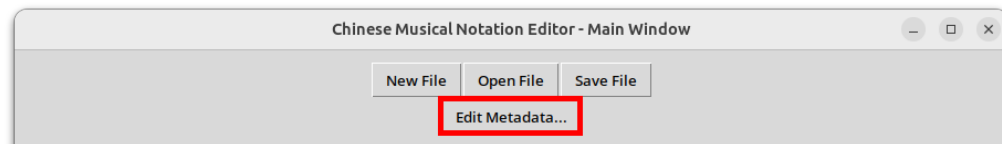

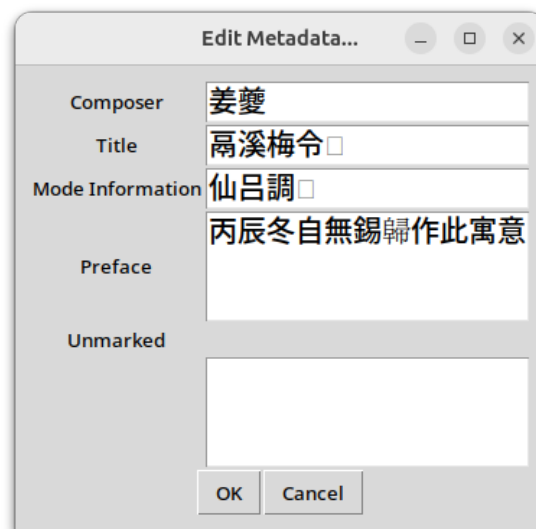

The widgets in the `Note input` group are analogous to those of the Chinese Musical Notation Annotation Tool. Here, the piece's mode can be changed and information about the mode can be displayed. Also, the current note's notation, lyrics and line break can be adjusted, ...

...and the changes are immediately applied, as reflected in the `Notation Window`.

Editing Metadata

Using the button `Edit Metadata...`,...

...a new dialog appears, where the piece's composer, title, preface, mode name and additional information can be entered.

Export to Other Formats

Using the button `Export Image`, the notation as displayed in the Notation Window can be saved in PNG format. With `Export MusicXML`, the piece is first saved as MusicXML with the notation-specific transnotation scheme, and with `Export Text`, the contents of the piece are exported as a human-readable text representation.
